KINGDOM OF CAMBODIA: Nokoreach ("Royal Kingdom")

The Kingdom of Cambodia (formerly known as Kampuchea) is bordered by Thailand, Laos and Vietnam. In the south, the coast faces the Gulf of Thailand but the geography of the country is dominated by the Mekong River. The main language of the country is Khmer and the main religion is Buddhism. The country has a land area of 181,035 sq km (69,898 sq miles). Its main exports are clothing, fish products and rubber. Politically, the country could be described as a multiparty liberal democracy under monarchy.

Nokoreach ("Royal Kingdom") is the national anthem of Cambodia. The music was adapted by F. Perruchot and J. Jekyll from an old Cambodian folk tune. It was originally adopted in 1941 and reconfirmed in 1947, around the time of independence from France. In 1970, the monarchy was abolished, thereby replacing the anthem as well. After the communist victory in 1975, former royalist symbols, including "Nokoreach", were reinstated for a time. The Khmer Rouge then replaced it with "Glorious Seventeenth of April". After the royalist party FUNCINPEC defeated the former communists (Cambodian People's Party) in the 1993 elections, the royalist anthem was restored. The title of the anthem is derived from the name of an ancient Khmer kingdom. The words were written by Samdech Sangha Raja Chuon Nath (1883-1969), who was the Supreme Patriarch Kana Mahanikaya of Cambodia.
